

Solus, Findhorn
Edge Architecture & Design
Photography by Finlay Grant

This project is the first straw-bale house to be built in Scotland and was initiated by a small group of enthusiasts from the Findhorn Foundation in an effort to break new ground in alternative construction techniques. It gestated for several years before being realized by the Jay-Lewin family. All involved, from client to specialised sub-contractors, have embraced the 'green' agenda promoted by the architect. This ambition extends to materials and building elements, the majority of which have been sourced locally or recycled where possible.
